Hello Cally,
I'm getting in touch regarding the number of public records requests the Idaho Transportation Department received in 2013 and the number of requests received so far this year.
In 2013, the department received 54 public records requests. Out of those, 30 were regarding oil equipment shipments, or megaloads. The other 24 requested information or records on a variety of subjects that range from how speed limits are set to fatal accidents that may have occurred on highways. Other requests ask for engineering or planning documents.
This year, the department has received 39 public records requests so far. Of those, 13 were regarding oil equipment shipments, or megaloads. Other requests asked for information on guardrail, information on a subcontractor that provided traffic control and on studies that were done to determine highway speeds, among other subjects.
None of the requests were denied in 2013, and all were answered within the allowable timeframe. This year, none of the requests have been denied. The response to one request this year occurred outside of the allowable timeframe because of a miscommunication between myself and a staff member located in the transportation department's Coeur d'Alene office.
Please don't hesitate to contact me if there's any additional information I can provide.

Sincerely,

Adam Rush
